Entered at the Postofice at Alexandria, Virginia, a second-class matter.] What Beat Cleveland. An office holder at the head of an important branch of the public service in Boston gives a little of his experience to show that Cieveland was beaten because he refused to go in for the spoils. "Early in my official career," he says, "I made up my mind that republican officeholders ought to go, partly because it would be in the interest of the public service to give them their walking papers, but principally, I am willing to con-fess, because better men, who had helped the democratic party to win, wanted their places. I remember with what high hopes I made my first visit to Washington in the ca pacity of a would-be executioner; but, alas how ruthlessly those hopes were dashed. After exhausting all the forms of efficial etiquette, I was ushered into the presence of the cabinet officer who was my official chief. I never realized before what the fellow meant who, when speaking of an eminent visionary, said he had his head in the clouds, three clouds above the moon. If the man hadn't been serious, the whole thing would have been ridiculous. He wouldn't listen to the idea of turning a single republican out Manufacturers of Manufa be curbed. Perhaps, if we modelled our behavior after the republican fashion, shrinking alike from criticism or praise, we might somehow manage to sneak in again for another term. That was the impression his advice left on me. Weil, what was the result of this policy? The democrate cursed me for not turning the republicans out, and many of my party friends rightfully, and properly, too, I believe, became so disgusted with the Administration that they voted for Harrison. But how did my subordinates vote who were kapt in by the favor of the Administration? Did they vote for Cleveland, whose generosity put from $1,200 to $2,000 a year in their pockets? Every one of them voted for Harrison, as it was reasonable to suppose they would do, and you have my word for it that I would not have voted for Grover Cleveland's re-election had I not been a democratic officehold-er. I don't wonder at his defeat. What surprises me is that he got as many demo-cratic votes as he did. The experience of every other official in this city, or in the country for that matter, is similar to mine, and they all confessit in private, but for man-ifest reasons dislike to do so in public."—N.

sicalities of fashion. The distinction between good breeding and fashion is usually pretty strongly mark-ed in people of the new rich variety. These upstarts are apt to be well up in all the devices and desires of fashion; they are painfully exact in their observance the latest whimsicalities of dress and deportment; they are miserable over any failure to keep up with the freshes changes in the ever-varying code of rules laid down by some vulgar leader of tashion who is for a moment at the head of the swim; but they are absolutely outside of the truly well-bred circle. The "caste of Vere de Vere" is above the accidents of the hour and does not descend from its lofty eleva-tion because of a failure to comply with outward rules which change from day to day and from week to week, like the dictates of fashion. And herein is the whole secret to the matter; fashion is of the surface, while breeding is of the mind. Fashion deals with the behavior; breeding is a matter of the character. Fashion is a varnish which may be applied to any surface, while breeding is a method of making. A beggar may be taken from the gutter and trained to the height of fashion, while a man can be well-bred only through a process begun with his grand fathers.
